MICROSOFT CORPORATION'S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE REPLY BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF ITS MOTION TO DISMISS FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

Defendant Microsoft Corporation, by its attorneys, Mitchell, Williams, Selig, Gates & Woodyard, P.L.L.C., for its Motion for Leave to File Reply Brief in Support of Its Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State A Claim, states:

1. On November 29, 2012, Microsoft filed a Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim.
2. Plaintiff Curtis J. Neeley, Jr. filed an opposition on December 17, 2012.
3. Microsoft believes it is necessary to address the arguments raised by Plaintiff in his opposition, particularly the characterization of his lawsuit as one for breach of contract, a theory which does not appear anywhere in Plaintiff's Amended Complaint.
4. Microsoft further believes that a Reply would assist the Court in making its determination on the pending issues.

5. Accordingly, Microsoft requests that it be given leave to file a Reply Brief in Support of its Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State A Claim.

6. A copy of Microsoft's proposed Reply Brief in Support of its Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State A Claim is attached hereto as Exhibit "1."

WHEREFORE, Defendant Microsoft Corporation prays that its Motion for Leave to File Reply Brief in Support of Its Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State A Claim be granted, and for all other relief to which it is entitled.

Respectfully submitted,

MICROSOFT CORPORATION'S REPLY BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF ITS MOTION TO DISMISS FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

Microsoft Corporation respectfully submits this brief in reply to Plaintiff, Curtis J. Neeley, Jr.'s, opposition to Microsoft's Motion to Dismiss Mr. Neeley's Amended Complaint for failure to state a claim.

I. INTRODUCTION

In its Motion to Dismiss Mr. Neeley's Amended Complaint for failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted (Dkt. No. 14-15), Microsoft explained that it had failed to discern any cognizable claim or legal theory in Mr. Neeley's pleading (which appeared to hint at, but did not assert, notions of privacy or copyright). Now, in his opposition brief, Mr. Neeley appears to characterize his Amended Complaint as seeking relief for breach of contract. Specifically, Mr. Neeley suggests that when Microsoft Customer Support staff allegedly explained to him how the Bing search engine refreshes its search results, an "implied contract" between him and Microsoft arose, imposing on Microsoft a "DUTY to perform." Dkt. No. 31 at 3. This claim is defective on its face, and Microsoft could not have discerned Mr. Neeley's breach of contract theory from any of the allegations in his Amended Complaint. Accordingly, Microsoft respectfully asks the Court to dismiss Mr. Neeley's claims as to Microsoft with prejudice.

II. ARGUMENT

Mr. Neeley fails to allege any facts in his Amended Complaint or in his opposition that suggest a contract existed between him and Microsoft. A binding contract requires an offer, acceptance of that offer, and an exchange of consideration. See, e.g., Pruitt v. Dickerson Excavation, Inc., 379 S.W.3d 766, 772 (Ark. Ct. App. 2010) ("burden of proving a contract" entails proving "offer, acceptance, and consideration"). Mr. Neeley's theory fails on all three counts.

An offer must be "promissory in nature" and "sufficiently definite in [its] terms to create a contract." Crawford v. Gen. Contract Corp., 174 F. Supp. 283, 298 (W.D. Ark. 1959). Mr. Neeley's alleged exchanges with Microsoft cannot constitute offers. A simple description of Bing's standard practice, explaining that changes to a third-party website "will reflect in Bing on our normal refresh cycle," does not entail any commitment specific to Mr. Neeley and lacks definiteness as to both time and the specific search results at issue. Dkt. No. 31 at 3. Moreover, even if such an explanation were deemed an offer, nothing in Mr. Neeley's allegations suggests that he accepted, or that the parties ever exchanged or contemplated exchanging any consideration. Mr. Neeley's claim for breach of contract is defective on its face.¹

That Mr. Neeley now characterizes his claims as ones for breach of contract only highlights the defects in his Amended Complaint. As noted, the allegations in Mr. Neeley's pleading do not come close to describing the basic elements of an enforceable contract, and nothing else in the Amended Complaint gave Microsoft any indication that Mr. Neeley intended to press such a legal theory. Indeed, the word “contract” does not appear in the pleading. Thus, even if Mr. Neeley could somehow articulate a cognizable claim for breach of contract, he has failed to plead it in the first instance and cannot now use his opposition brief to cure such a glaring defect. See, e.g., Morgan Distrib. Co., Inc. v. Unidynamic Corp., 868 F.2d 992, 995 (8th Cir. 1989) (“[I]t is axiomatic that a complaint may not be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss.”) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

¹ Mr. Neeley does not appear to press a claim for promissory estoppel, and he cannot do so. His Amended Complaint and opposition brief make no suggestion that Microsoft should have expected to induce any action or forbearance on Mr. Neeley's part, or that he undertook any action or forbearance based on any alleged statements by Microsoft. See Ralston Purina Co. v. McCollum, 611 S.W.2d 201, 203 (Ark. Ct. App. 1981) (under the doctrine of promissory estoppel, a promise is binding "if the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character by the promisee, and if that action is induced").

While Mr. Neeley’s opposition references a new, defective legal theory, it is based on essentially the same allegations Mr. Neeley has made against Microsoft before, and that this Court has already refused to entertain. Mr. Neeley’s opposition does not address his repeated attempts to sue Microsoft. But as established in Microsoft’s moving papers, because of these repeated attempts the Amended Complaint should be dismissed as to Microsoft with prejudice. See Dkt. No. 15 at 2-4, 10; Mangan v. Weinberger, 848 F.2d 909, 911 (8th Cir. 1988) (affirming dismissal of amended complaint with prejudice due to plaintiff’s “deliberate persistence in refusing to conform his pleadings to the requirements of Rule 8”).

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should dismiss Mr. Neeley’s Amended Complaint as to Microsoft with prejudice.
